* "Equitator may be translated as 'rider' or perhaps as 'harvest supervisor'. The lands ... were often scattered over a wide area. The man responsible for ensuring that the harvest was gathered in efficiently would need to move quickly from one field to another, and thus would need a horse. The horse may have been the official's own, rather than one provided by the lord, and so the lord may not have provided fodder. Instead, the rider's payment would be expected to cover his costs in feeding the horse." Dr Mark Page (personal correspondence 6.9.2005). The rider did not receive a stipend at this time, and was presumably a full-time employee of the abbey.

† Other rectory accounts use the term 'tithes collectors' [collector' dec'orum] (eg W27307).
