The Other Princess Charlotte The short life of the Prince Regent's daughter

Lecture by Anne Stott

On 6th November 1817, Princess Charlotte, the daughter of the Prince Regent, died in childbirth. Charlotte was the child of a broken marriage and her short life saw many conflicts with her father. She was rebellious and high-spirited but found fulfilment eventually in a happy marriage. This made her death all the more tragic and a shocked nation went into deep mourning.

Anne Stott has taught History for the WEA, the Open University and Birkbeck, University of London. She has written biographies of the Evangelical philanthropist, Hannah More, and of William Wilberforce and his circle.

This lecture will be followed by tea and cakes

All are welcome, no advance booking required
£8 including refreshments

The Annual General Meeting will commence at about 4.30 pm

In 70 years the British political world is turned upside down. One King is publicly executed and his second son flees into exile after the last successful foreign invasion of these isles. By the end of this period, Parliament is politically dominant, Protestantism is in the ascendancy, Ireland is a colony and a new political entity - Britain - has been created. None of this was inevitable. So whilst this course looks at what happened and why, it also examines movements that did not succeed. The political radicals - Levellers, Diggers- the messianic religious groups - the Quakers, Ranters and Shakers - and try and see them in their own light. Whilst these 70 years are amongst the important decades in British history, dynamism is not limited to politics. With great literature - Paradise Lost, Pilgrim's Progress, Restoration comedies - pioneering science - Newton, Hooke, Royal Society - and fascinating insight into day to day life - Pepys Diaries, this is history that resonates down the ages.
