Taylor

It is found by the homage that Richard Taylor recently held of the lord of this manor one field called or known by the name of Merton Close, containing by estimation two acres (or more or less), lying in this Manor near Merton Common, customary and heriotable, and now in the tenure or occupation of William Snowden. He has died, but before his death he alienated the same parcel of land to William Coddington who ought to pay the lord for fine three pounds but has not made payment, as the same William Coddington similarly is dead and according to the custom of this Manor he surrendered the same into the hand of the lord to the use and behoof of his son William Coddington who ought to pay the lord for another fine three pounds but similarly has not made payment, whereby the land by right descends into the lord's hand. And proclamation was made if ...

Rent 20d £1 13s 0d £9 0s 0d	... etc. And the same William Coddington appears in open court and claims the land by right of his father and surrenders the same into the lord's hand to the use and behoof of John Taylor, whereby there accrues to the lord for another fine three pounds. And the same John Taylor in full and open court comes and humbly seeks that he be admitted tenant to the same Close, whom the lord by his steward aforesaid admits and hands over seisin by the rod, to have and to hold to the same John Taylor and his heirs for ever at the lord's will ^{according to the custom of the manor aforesaid} under a yearly rent of twenty pence and by services of right due and accustomed. And he gives the lord for rent arrears just as in the margin. And for three fines just as in the margin. And so he is admitted tenant thereof and he does his fealty etc.
