At this court comes William Marsshall in his proper person, and surrenders into the lord's hand one messuage, one garden and one orchard with appurtenances now in the tenure of Robert Bedyll to the use of Humfrey Wade gent and his heirs, whereby there falls to the lord nothing for heriot because he remains a tenant etc. And upon this, at the same court, comes the aforesaid Humfrey and seeks his admittance to the premises, to whom the lord king by his steward grants him seisin thereof, to have to himself and his heirs, according to the customs of the manor.
